Change the way you play Minecraft! It fused together into a team of people and began pumping out community-altering projects. The Technic website and Forums provided a place for people to discuss things in a respectable way with hard-hitting moderators and at least the illusion of quality control. The app finally hit home the idea that people don't want to hand-change .jar files to play modded Minecraft. Tekkit gave server operators a chance to actually run and play a heavily modded Minecraft server by easily having a standard client to point users to, introduced modded Minecraft to hundreds of thousands of players, and gave thousands of (mostly aspiring) YouTube stars a block of content to play with. Voltz showcased an unheard of team and their creations, giving them a huge bank of eager consumers within a week of launch. Recently the new Technic Launcher and Technic Platform are ready to once again streamline down modded Minecraft, and do it seamlessly for content creators, server operators, and players to kick back and play, create, claim and enjoy the game they love with as little hassle as possible. Technic as an identity and community has left its mark on Minecraft, what was once a .zip file is now a more strong powerhouse of society.
